

The Manifestation Paradox

The Third Doorway To Becoming A Financial Shaman

The Paradox:

To attempt to manifest something means there is something you want that you believe only the Universe can provide. The reason you turn to manifestation is that you believe, whether it is true or not, that there are no logical steps in physical world actions to get you what you want in a reasonable time frame. Like saying, “I want to be a millionaire in the next two years.” There are no logical steps to obtain a million dollars in under two years, at least not starting with nothing or very little. If you had half a million dollars already, there are an abundance of ways to double it in two years. So then you attempt to manifest it instead of taking thirty years to save that much money working a job.

So you want something and you go to your higher self in order to align and create it in physical reality. However, your higher self wants something too, it wants you to experience a life of poverty, to keep with the example from above. So now you and your higher self are out of alignment because you want to experience being a millionaire due to having experienced so much poverty, which is what your higher self wanted to experience before coming here. So what do you do if your higher self wants you to continue experiencing poverty but you do not want that?

This leaves you as the side of you living in the physical world with only three options. You either accept the life of poverty that your higher self wanted before you came and let go of trying to manifest, essentially accepting your lot in life. Or you can accept that you and your higher self disagree on how this life should be played out, essentially driving a wedge between you and your higher self and staying misaligned. Or you can attempt to get your higher self to agree with your perception of things because you are the one in the game, essentially you try to change God's mind. Knowing that there are never any mistakes, that last option is more than a little arrogant. So, what do you do?

The Threshold:

You may say, "Well, this is a journey of self-discovery, so you need to find out what your higher self wanted to experience before coming here. How do you actually know your heart wants you to continue experiencing poverty? Are you meant to experience poverty for an entire lifetime until death, or is abundance around the corner?" A great suggestion, except how often does your heart or higher self tell you the future? The future is never for you to know, so how do you trust what is said about it, if anything is said about it at all?

Does it at all matter what you want while in the game? Does your vantage point from within physical reality have any credence whatsoever? If you have practiced prayer or manifestation before reading this, how can you be sure you have manifested anything in the past? How do you know it wasn't all supposed to be exactly the way that it was? How do you know your want, prayer, or manifestation affected anything about your life at all? How do you know anything you thought you "manifested" in the past was just going to be there no matter what and you just wanted or "manifested" what was already coming? Does giving you what you want or answering your prayers alter or ruin the experience of life you wanted to have before you came here? How would you know?

When you want something from the Universe and it is not forthcoming, it can feel like no one cares about what you want. If you are in disagreement with your higher self then you don't care about what it wants for you. So then disagreement means someone is not going to get what they want. Either you are not going to get what you want to manifest, or if you do manifest what you want and alter your life path then your higher self won't get the experience it wanted to get before writing the script or you were destined to fulfill. You are asking your higher self to trust you and give you what you want and care about your perspective from within the experience of physical reality, but the ask is coming from a place of not trusting your higher self in what it wants for you and its perspective from outside the game. This leaves you with only two options, give up manifesting, praying, and asking for anything, or try to find common ground with your higher self and attempt to figure out where your script is going and why.
